

Cityscapes: When New York was a blue-collar town

Book Party

Tuesday, May 26, 6-8 p.m.

National Writers Union ☉ 256 W. 38th St., 12th floor, Manhattan

Join us for a discussion about writing—memoirs, novels, novellas, poetry and publishing—with three new authors

Walter Balcerak

“The View From Brooklyn”

Now retired, the author was a professional writer for his entire career, working as a technical writer, and as an editor/writer for trade magazines and a union newspaper.

Bill Hohfeld

“Ascent to Avalon”

An author who spent 32 years as a Metal Lather/Reinforcing Ironworker and 11 years at Local 46 Labor Management Cooperative Trust and now writes for the Labor Press, New York.

Stan Maron

“New York Hustle”

In his memoir, the author takes us back in time to his troubled youth in a New Jersey beach town, and early jobs delivering racks of clothing, loading bricks at demolition sites, and peddling on the streets of New York.
